Description:

“When a film is not a document, it is a dream. . . . At the editing table, when I run the strip of film through, frame by frame, I still feel that dizzy sense of magic of my childhood.” Bergman, who has conveyed this heady sense of wonder and vision to moviegoers for decades, traces his lifelong love affair with film in his breathtakingly visual autobiography, The Magic Lantern. More grand mosaic than linear account, Bergman’s vignettes trace his life from a rural Swedish childhood through his work in theater to Hollywood’s golden age, and a tumultuous romantic history that includes five wives and more than a few mistresses. Throughout, Bergman recounts his life in a series of deeply personal flashbacks that document some of the most important moments in twentieth-century filmmaking as well as the private obsessions of the man behind them. Ambitious in scope yet sensitively wrought, The Magic Lantern is a window to the mind of one of our era’s great geniuses. “[Bergman] has found a way to show the soul’s landscape. . . . Many gripping revelations.”—New York Times Book Review “Joan Tate’s translation of this book has delicacy and true pitch. . . . The Magic Lantern is as personal and penetrating as a Bergman film, wry, shadowy, austere.”—New Republic “[Bergman] keeps returning to his past, reassessing it, distilling its meaning, offering it to his audiences in dazzling new shapes.”—New York Times “What Bergman does relate, particularly his tangled relationships with his parents, is not only illuminating but quite moving. No ‘tell-all’ book this one, but revealing in ways that much longer and allegedly ‘franker’ books are not.”—Library Journal

Woody Allen was asked by Public Radios Terry Gross on Fresh Air what were the movies he had most watched in his life. One of the three he named was Ingmar Bergman’s classic The Seventh Seal. Bergman has exerted a powerful filmic influence on Allen and other directors. He is one of the most important directors in the history of film so all we can learn about him is of importance. The Magic Lantern is Bergman’s autobiography published in 1986. Bergman (1918-2007) was born to a devout, strict and dour Lutheran clergyman and his wife. The parents were cold with many marital problems and conflicts in their over fifty years of marriage. His father rose to high prominence in the Swedish church hierarchy while the mother became emotionally withdrawn from the marriage. Bergman was loved by his parents but they were strict with him, his brother and sister. Bergman was a sensitive boy who was plagued by various illnesses. He loved to read, listen to music, walk and watch movies on his magic lantern projector received as a Christmas present. Bergman attended the University of Stockholm, heiled Hitler while on a visit to a chum in Germany and did not serve in World War II. He rose in the Swedish film industry making such masterpieces of cinema art as Wild Strawberries; Persona; The Seventh Sign; Scenes from a Marriage; Autumn Sonata Fanny and Alexander and other films popular in American art houses and throughout the world. Bergman’s personal life was a mess! He was married five times; had several children and was an unfaithful husband. Bergman was a complex artist who was egocentric and often selfish in his relationships with other human beings. His forbidding childhood in a religious home led to his spiritual rebellion. He was an atheist who was haunted by the austere God of Swedish Lutheran piety. He feared death and was flummoxed at his inability to explain it to himself. Bergmans films deal with such themes as death, love, family, isolation and fear. He was a perfectionist who developed the art of film directing to a collaborative art. Bergman complains too much and in too much detail about his stomach and bowel problems. Does he think we are interested in his gustatory woes? He comes across as a complex, argumentative, intellectual and difficult man to know and love. I do admire him for his honesty and willingness to share his many faults, fears and phobias with the reading audience. The book is well written evoking the beauties of the Swedish countryside; the mystery of love and death and the poignant memories of his lost childhood. Ingmar Bergman was a great filmmaker, a flawed human being and a seeker to answers for the drama of living life on earth.
